Although overall this sounds nice, it NEVER works out this way and to think this time will be different is delusional.

What safeguards will be put in place to ensure proper spending?
Who will be accountable to manage this on time and on budget?
How realistic are the savings?
Where are the incentives for the people trying to push this through.

This needs to be scrutinized and supervised by someone who doesn't have a dog in the fight.

This sounds like a polished turd that's made to look good but will take twice as long, cost 3 times as much and most of the money will be wasted away to 'we don't know where' where insiders will get rich.

If you are honest and judge yourselves by your previous results, what will be the result of this?

Are managers of this project willing to have skin in the game? 10% of overages come out of all managers accounts? and then, 10% of savings go to them as a bonus? I would be not one person accepts this.

I vote no. This will waste tens or hundreds of millions of dollars that will fall to the customers.

Best of luck. Put me in charge, I'll put skin in the game. I'll take the deal I made above.

When this goes through (which I'm sure it will), PLEASE, spend the money as if it is your own. Don't waste it. 'If this was my house and my money, would I do it? or would I shop it around?' Shop it around. Have savvy people running the show and procuring.
